CCP receives World Bank award

By our correspondent

ISLAMABAD: Dr Joseph Wilson, the Chairman, Competition Commission of Pakistan (CCP) received award for winning the World Bank's 2013 Competition Advocacy Contest in the category of "Successfully promoting pro-competition market reforms, opening of markets, and infusion of competition principles in other sectoral policies."

World Bank representative Gabi G Afram, programme leader, Pakistan Country Management Unit presented the award.

Earlier this year, the WB had announced that the CCP won the contest for advocating to increase competition in the crucial segment of Pakistan's air transportation market — the route between Pakistan and Mecca. The CCP recommendations were implemented by the Civil Aviation Authority, resulting in two new airlines entering the market, decreasing the cost of air travel.

The CCP had raised its concerns by issuing a Policy Note to the government of Pakistan in 2010 recommending that the bilateral Air Services Agreement of 1972 between Pakistan and Saudi Arabia be amended to address competition concerns. It also recommended amending the agreement to allow multiple airlines of both countries to operate direct scheduled services and hajj services between the two countries; abolish any market division, quotas and payment of royalties; and allow market forces to determine ticket prices without interference from either country's aviation authority or airlines.

The WB said that the aim of this contest was to showcase the role of competition agencies. "We are pleased to share many successful advocacy stories from competition authorities in developing and emerging markets," stated the WB.

ISLAMABAD – Competition Commission of Pakistan (CCP) Chairman Dr Joseph Wilson here on Friday was presented the award for winning the World Bank's 2013 Competition Advocacy Contest in the category of “successfully promoting pro-competition market reforms, opening of markets and infusion of competition principles in other sectoral policies.”

The award was presented by World Bank representative Gabi G Afram, said a press release issued here. Earlier this year, the World Bank had announced that CCP won the contest for conducting advocacy to increase competition in the crucial segment of Pakistan's air transportation market – the route between Pakistan and Makkah and its recommendations were implemented by the Civil Aviation Authority.

The advocacy results in two new airlines, entering the market and a decrease in the cost of air travel for consumers. The CCP had raised its concerns by issuing a policy note to the government in 2010 recommending that the bilateral Air Services Agreement of 1972 between Pakistan and Saudi Arabia be amended to address competition concerns.

It also recommended to amend the agreement to allow multiple airlines of both the countries to operate direct scheduled services and hajj services between the two countries, abolish any market division quotas and payment of royalties and allow market forces to determine ticket prices without interference from either country's aviation authority or airlines.

The World Bank said that the aim of this contest was to showcase the role of the competition agencies in promoting competition. “We are pleased to share many successful advocacy stories from the competition authorities in developing and emerging markets,” the bank stated.
